Topic	Workshop on talk on role of patents in start-up
Session Overview	The recognition of opportunities and the decision to commercialize them is the focal concern. This literature views opportunities as real and independent of the entrepreneurs that perceive them. While the prevalent view in the entrepreneurship literature is that opportunities are exogenous, the most prevalent theory of innovation in the economics literature suggests that opportunities are, in fact, endogenous. Measurement of innovation and technological change have played a major role in the analysis and understanding of the links between entrepreneurship and innovation.
